Madras. February 4.—General You Kodolitsch, in the course of an interview with a press representative, said he envised and admired the Indian army. He considered the Indian Cavalry quite up to the standard of that of any Continental power, and able to hold their own man for man against any regiments of French or Russian cavalry. The sporting qualities of the British officers particularly struck the General during his tone in India, and this sport seemed to give the officers much good physical training. It was his opinion that this training in field sports was almost as important as that on the drill ground. Nowhere had he seen so much money offered for prizes in rifle shooling as in India. As regards a Russian invasion, the General said the Rossiana would have absolutely no chance of success. The General fold the Madras Times reporter that he liked everything in India.
